The doctor is IN” is a kind of help desk that will provide mentoring for students to mid-career faculty at all manner of institutions. The format is like speed-mentoring (you can either drop in or make an appointment)—specialists will counsel others on such topics as:

- what are appropriate structure / categories for CVs, especially for work in the US;
- how to say no (nicely) to more service;
- how to interpret readers’ comments after an article is returned and how to tackle a revision;
- what are good venues for grants;
- how does one write a job letter to a 4/4 institution when one is a graduate student at an R1 school;
• what are ways to do or incorporate research at teaching institutions;
• how to choose a journal for an article;
• how to track citations of one’s work and make sense of it;
• how does one write an attractive book proposal for an edition, an anthology, a monograph—and for which kind of press;
• what kinds of publishing and scholarly venues are helpful for people with access needs;
• what are allied professions other than university teaching,
• dual career couples / work-life situations;
• stopping the tenure clock?;
• adjunct concerns
• and etc., etc., etc.

If you are interested in offering your services and expertise, know of colleagues who would be good resources, would like to suggest topics for mentoring, or would like to sign up for mentoring when we complete the list of experts, please contact Rebecca Shapiro at rshapiro@citytech.cuny.edu.
